

Conclusions

The sample covers a quarter of physicians in Finland and is therefore a unique sample of experiences of collegiality. Overall experiences of collegiality were good. Young physicians considered collegiality better than their older colleagues. Fields of collegiality associated more closely with positive aspects of physician collaboration (e.g. “trust between colleagues”) were considered better than negative ones (e.g. “referring colleague to a care”).